BURLESON URGES WIRE OWNERSHIP

of great interest to students of economic problems, as it contains, in ogical order, the material necessary for a most searching inquiry into the postal, telegraph and telephone services in the United States and abroad. Many illuminating comparisons are instituted and graphically illustrated by means of charts. One of the most interesting of the eight voluminous appendices is a historical resume of the agitation in the United States for Government ownership of telegraphs and telephones.

The committee's report treats the subjects of telegraphs and telephones from the constitutional, economic, engineering, and financial viewpoint. The report states that it was clearly the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the Governmen should have a monopoly over all means for the transmission of intelligence and that the broad provision that "Congress shall have the power to establish postoffices and postroads," conveyed to the Government a monopoly, not only over all means of transmitting intelligence then existing, but over all means that might be developed. The report calls attention to the fact that the Government aided in the construction of, and operated, as a part of the postal service, the first telegraph line in this country.

The Michigan "blue sky" law became effective August 15, 1913, following the tide of similar legislation passed in sixteen other States.

The Investment Bankers' Association of America took an active part in opposition to the law. Upon the day it became effective the association, through A. B. Leach & Co., N. W. Halsey & Co., Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings Bank and Lee, Higginson & Co. was granted a temporary injunction restraining the Michigan Securities Commission from proceeding with the enforcement of the law. Under this law the State was given power to hold up sales of bonds for thirty days. One other objection was the power given the State to inspect the books of the bond house rather than those of the issuing corporation. The decision is far-reaching in its effect upon the bond business of the United States, and settles the right of a State to regulate the business of a bond house outside of a State to do business in the State.
